COMING TO

PARKS & RECREATION

IN FEBRUARY

While the initial hysteria — caused last summer by an E. coli outbreak allegedly traced to a Georgia waterpark — has subsided, the questions raised have not. How can aquatics professionals reduce the risk of patrons getting sick at their facility? Develop a plan of reasonable precautions and procedures to reduce the probability of infection, author John F. Whitmore, CLP tells P&R readers.

When faced with the impending doom of escalating costs and shrinking public interest in its swimming facilities, the city of Omaha (Neb.) Parks, Recreation and Public Property Department didn't panic. Instead, it created Omaha's Pool Plan, which has resulted in renewed citizen interest and a brighter future for aquatics.

PLUS, delivery of the leisure experience, junior swim programs, and much, much more...
